06-13-2013. These goods are classified in Class 1, because cement preservatives, except paints and oils, are classified in Class 1. These goods are finished products and are not in the nature of unprocessed resins used for further manufacture. Thus, unlike an identification for 'synthetic resins' which must include an indication that the goods are 'unprocessed' for classification in Class 1, it is not necessary to indicate that the goods in this entry are 'unprocessed.' Under the Tenth Edition of the Nice Classification system, applicants must indicate the generic name of food additives and their purpose, and classify them according to that purpose. When the food additives are for culinary purposes, then their nature also factors into the classification. Whether the goods are for commercial use does not control classification. The key classification issue is whether they are for food manufacturing (and therefore in Class 1) or for cooking and baking (and therefore classified in Classes 29-33 according to their nature). A	On 07-10-2014, this Note was added to make clear the distinction between coatings in Class 2 and Class 19. A coating is a liquid spread on surfaces that dries to form a thin layer, often of color, and is justified in Class 2 based on the Class Heading, 'Paints, varnishes, lacquers.' However, coatings that are not in Class 2 are not in the nature of liquids that dry to a thin layer. Rather, they are coatings that lay down a substantial layer that amounts to application of a building material, and are therefore, justified in Class 19 based on the Class Heading, 'Building materials (non-metallic)' and the Alphabetical List entry, 'coatings [building materials]' in Class 19. M	09/23/2010	GOODS	9-23-10 - the 6-1-01 entry was modified from “Wood chips for smoking and flavoring foods.” Wood chips for flavoring wine is in Class 31 since it imparts flavor without burning as the wood chips in Class 4 must do - the chips are often introduced in the wine making process for wine that is not stored in wood barrels but that benefit or are expected to have a woody flavor element. Including the word “flavoring” in the Class 4 ID can cause confusion with the wood chips used for flavoring only in Class 31.	T	"09-2007"

A	04/02/1991	GOODS	1-14-10 - The 4-2-91 entry was changed from “repellents” to “preparations for repelling” to make it clear that these goods are preparations and not apparatus. The distinction is particularly important concerning birds since there are bird repellents in the form of spike or other hard objects that would not be in Class 5 but could be included in the meaning of “repellent.”		″09-2007″

A	03/05/2015	GOODS	Bulk rice scoops in Class 8 are generally used to transfer unspecified amounts of rice, for example, from a bag to a container. These tools are commonly used in large scale food preparation (but may also be used in household and non-commercial settings). Bulk rice scoops in Class 8 are different from scoops and dishers in Class 21, which are for serving or portioning foods such as ice cream, coffee, and cookie dough. For classification purposes, the key distinction between scoops in Class 8 and scoops in Class 21 is whether the scoops are for transferring unspecified amounts of materials or foods, or for serving or portioning foods. A	04/02/1991	GOODS	09-15-11 This wording is not to be used interchangeably with “electronic controllers.” An “electric” or “electrical” controller is used in the control of electricity. An “electronic controller” is an electronic device that is used to control the movement or position of a piece of equipment. As a result, it is necessary to specify for the “electronic controller” what is being controlled.		"07-1997"
